THE HISTORY AND BACKGROUND OF

WHAT SWEETER MUSIC

"What Sweeter Music" was composed by John Rutter in 1987. The text, which begins "What sweeter music can we bring, than a carol, for to sing the birth of this our heavenly King?" is a 17th-century lyric by the English poet Robert Herrick (1591-1674). Herrick, a clergyman and poet, wrote numerous poems celebrating the traditions of Christmas, and his words provided Rutter with a perfect framework for a modern carol steeped in tradition.

The piece was originally written for the famous British vocal group The King's Singers, who premiered it in 1987. This origin explains much about the piece's character. The King's Singers are renowned for their blend, precision, and warm, intimate sound, and Rutter's writing for "What Sweeter Music" reflects these qualities. The carol was later published as part of the collection "The Oxford Book of Carols" and has since been arranged for various vocal configurations.

Understanding this history adds a layer of appreciation when you obtain your What Sweeter Music John Rutter sheet music. You are connecting with a work that was crafted for one of the world's finest vocal ensembles and has since become a beloved part of the global choral tradition.

ANALYSIS: WHAT MAKES THIS

CAROL SO SPECIAL

Several musical elements contribute to the enduring appeal of "What Sweeter Music." Let us examine them in detail.

Melodic Beauty and Lyrical Flow

The melody of "What Sweeter Music" is deceptively simple. It unfolds in a gentle, flowing manner, with natural speech-like rhythms that make the text feel effortlessly set. Rutter avoids large leaps and musical features, instead relying on stepwise motion and small intervals to create a sense of intimacy and warmth. The melody rises and falls like a gentle breath, perfectly mirroring the tender subject matter of the Nativity. This lyrical quality is one of the primary reasons choirs and audiences love the piece. When you open your What Sweeter Music John Rutter sheet music, you will immediately notice how singable each vocal line is.

Harmonic Language

Rutter's harmonic palette in this carol is rich yet accessible. He uses traditional harmonies but adds subtle chromatic touches and unexpected chord progressions that give the music its distinctive character. There are moments of gentle dissonance that resolve beautifully, creating a sense of longing and fulfillment. The harmony supports the text without overwhelming it, allowing the words to remain clear and expressive. This balance between tradition and originality is a hallmark of Rutter's style.

Texture and Voice Leading

The original setting is for SATB (soprano, alto, tenor, bass)

chorus with optional organ or piano accompaniment. Rutter's voice leading is meticulous, with each part having its own melodic interest. The inner voices, particularly the alto and tenor, are not merely filler but have their own shapely lines that contribute to the overall tapestry of sound. The bass part provides a warm foundation, while the soprano carries the melody much of the time. The texture is predominantly homophonic, with all voices moving together in harmony, but there are moments of gentle imitation and counterpoint that add variety and depth.

The Accompaniment

The accompaniment, whether played on organ or piano, is characterized by flowing arpeggios and gentle chordal support. It never intrudes but rather envelops the voices, creating a halo of sound. The optional nature of the accompaniment means that the piece can be performed a cappella, which is how many choirs prefer to sing it. The version in your What Sweeter Music John Rutter sheet music will likely include both the vocal score and the accompaniment part, giving you flexibility in performance.

PERFORMANCE TIPS FOR CONDUCTORS AND SINGERS

Once you have secured your copy of What

Sweeter Music John Rutter sheet music, the next step is preparing a performance that does justice to this beautiful carol. Here are some practical tips.

Tempo and Phrasing

The tempo should be gentle and unhurried, typically around 60-66 beats per minute. The music should flow naturally, with phrases breathing at the ends of musical lines rather than in the middle of words. Encourage your singers to shape each phrase with a gentle crescendo and decrescendo, creating a sense of ebb and flow. The phrasing should feel organic, like a lullaby.

Diction and Text Expression

The text is the heart of this piece. Every word should be sung with clarity and meaning. Pay special attention to consonants, especially at the ends of phrases, to ensure the text is intelligible. The word "sweeter" itself should be sung with a sense of tenderness, and the word "carol" should feel joyful but not forced. Rutter's setting is exquisitely sensitive to the natural rhythms of English, so trust the text to guide your phrasing. When you open your What Sweeter Music John Rutter sheet music, you will see how carefully he has notated the rhythms to match the speech patterns.

Blend and Balance

Because the texture is predominantly homophonic, blend and balance are paramount. Each section should listen carefully to the others, ensuring that no single part dominates. The soprano line should be prominent but not overpowering, while the inner voices should provide warm support. The bass line should be present and grounded but not heavy. Aim for a unified, corporate sound that speaks as one voice.

Dynamic Contrast

Rutter provides dynamic markings in the score, from the hushed opening to the fuller climax on the phrase "the birth of this our heavenly King." Follow these markings faithfully, but also add your own subtle nuances. The piece benefits from a wide dynamic range, from the softest pianissimo to a rich, resonant mezzo-forte at the climax. The final verse should fade gently to a whisper, leaving the audience in a state of quiet reflection.

Accompaniment Considerations

If using the optional accompaniment, the organ or piano should be played with a light, flowing touch. The accompaniment should support the voices without covering them. In a church setting, the organ's softer stops are ideal. If using piano, a gentle, legato touch with thoughtful pedaling will create the desired atmosphere. The accompaniment part in your What Sweeter Music John Rutter sheet music is well-marked with phrasing and dynamic indications that will guide you.
